JACK'S SOLD BOOZE, WAITER TESTIFIES

Employee of 17 Years' Standing Turns Against Dunstan in Court.

William Heinze, seventeen years waiter at Jack's Restaurant, Sixth Avenue and 43d Street, continued today his testimony in the United States District Court against his employer, John Dunstan, who is charged with possessing and selling liquor in violation of the Volstead act.

Before the day's session Judge Mack had the jurors in his chambers for a long consultation. It was reported that one of them had greased an opinion in the case while the trial was in progress. After they returned to the courtroom one of the jurors asked for another private conference and the request was granted Heinze said that up to Aug. 3, last, liquier was sold to patrons of the restaurant in coffee cups; after that satrons bought liquor in half pint fiasks which were supplied by the headwaiter or room captain. He identified a brandy bottle as one which he had heard Dunstan tell Toner, an assistant manager, to bring from the

He identified a customer's check with charges for "red" (meaning whiskey) and "beer" (meaning the 414 per cent. kind) sold to Izzy Einstein. Moe Smith and Herman Wittenberg, Prohibition Agents. He said he had quarrelled with Dunstan because the proprietor insisted that the waiter should assume personal responsibility for the sale of the liquor.
